

Mamie arrives at Le Havre

Mrs. Mamie Eisenhower, widow of President Dwight D. Eisenhower, is escorted by ship line officials as she leaves the luxury liner United States on her arrival at Le Havre, France. The former First Lady is enroute to Brussels to visit with her son, John, the U.S. ambassador to Belgium. (UPI)

WORD FROM WASHINGTON is that Sen. J. William Fulbright will use private information from CIA Director Richard Helms this week to launch a major Senate salvo against the Safeguard antiballistic-missile system. Our source says Helms told Fulbright that the United States has gleaned no new intelligence on Russian SS9 rockets to justify massive expenditures on the defensive Safeguard system.

• GOOD HOUSEKEEPING SEASON OF THE WEEK goes to the militants who took over part of McCormick Theological Seminary. The vacuumed rugs, swept halls and posted signs: "If you make a mess, clean it up. The young Lords are not pigs." . . . The tough Cobra Stones from Cabr Green balked at joining the all-group cleanup squad. "I don't take orders from no honkey," said one.) So Dan Underwood, of Black, Active & Determined, whipped up his little red book of Thoughts of Chairman Mao and quoted the aging Chinese sage as saying: "Revolutionaries have class difference between them." (i.e., all mu-
